

DIMITRIS BOTIS, Deputy Director of the International Cooperation and Legal Affairs Department, EUIPO, ES

Dimitris Botis studied law in Athens and London (Queen Mary), specialising in IP. He joined the European Union Intellectual Property Office (EUIPO) in 1997 and currently holds the position of Deputy Director for Legal Affairs in the International Cooperation and Legal Affairs Department, which is responsible for defining EUIPO's IP policy, including the revision of the Office's Examination Guidelines, as well as for defending the practice of the Office before the EU Courts.

Dimitris has represented the EUIPO before the General Court and Court of Justice in cases with a significant impact on EU trade mark law such as the Lego Brick, the B&Q Loudspeaker and the IP Translator cases.

He has also participated in numerous projects in the field of trade mark law, notably the revision of the Office's Guidelines, the convergence programme with national EU TM Offices, the TM5 and ID5 projects and the legislative initiatives for the reform of the EU trademark system. He is also a regular speaker in conferences organised by major User Associations and Academia both within the EU and worldwide.

Dimitris is also co-author of the book 'Trade Mark Law in Europe', published by Oxford University Press, which is currently in its third edition.